Mayor Ainslie Tells Why He Favors Its Acquisition.

Saving in Co-Ordination of Departments Will Amply Finance Improvement.

Acquisition of the Richmond College tract by the city as a public park when the college moves to its new home at Westhampton, proposed by Mayor George Ainslie in his address at the opening of Richmond College on Tueday, met with many supporters yesterday, and it is now anticipated that as soon as definite information can be obtained, that the Mayor will make some recommendations to the Council in regard to the matter.

"I have not yet been definitely informed as to the cost," said Mayor Ainslie yesterday, "but I am certain that our plan of co-ordinating the departments of the city government will effect an ample saving in yearly expenditures sufficient to more than pay the interest charges on such an investment. In Direction of City's Growth.

"As to the proposed park the property is in line with the constant westward growth of the city, and if acquired at anything like its present valuation, would be a safe investment. If the time should come later when the city did not feel that it could afford to hold it for park purposes, it could be sold for much more than the city will now have to pay.

When Roosevelt Says "Theft," That Is What He Really Means.

LITTLE TO SAY OF POLITICS

Drops His Campaign to Talk of Deeper Waterways and Bear Hunting.

Memphis. Tenn. September 25.—Colonel Roosevelt dropped his campaign to-day and talked deeper waterways and bear hunting instead. The Progressive presidential nomines spent most of the day in Little Rock, Ark. and came to Memphis to-night. It was a rainy, depressing day. The Colonel was fatigued when he arrived here and went to his room. There was one brief reference to politics, however, during the day. When he was on his way from Little Rock to Memphis the Colonel went out to his platform at a stop to greet half a hundred persons who had gone in the rain to see him as he passed through. He talked to them for a moment.

had gone in the rain to see him as he passed through. He talked to them for a moment.

"You ought to belong to the Progressive party," he said, "if for no other reason than because we are trying to abolish boss rule." He said that the Republican presidential nomination had been taken by theft, "and when I say theft," he added, "I speak with scientific accuracy. I use the word in its most offensive meaning."

When Colonel Roosevelt reached Memphis a crowd was waiting for him at the station, but he hurried in to his hotel, went to the elevator and disappeared. The crowd followed into the lobby and cheered. After the cheering had continued for five minutes, Major-General J. H. McDowell, commander of the United Confederate Veterans of Tennessee, appeared and told the crowd that Colonel Roosevelt needed to rest and would not make a speech. The cheering went on the more loudly. After another five minutes Major McDowell appeared again. This time the crowd would not listen. Five minutes Dowell appeared again. Dowell appeared again. This time the crowd would not/listen. Five minutes more and Colonel Roosevelt capitulated. He came out on the balcony, thanked the crowd and added:

"Now I want to act as town crier myself. If there are any of the crowd I went bear hunting with here, I want to see them. I want them to come right up and talk about b'ars."

The bear hunters were there, and Colonel Roosevelt sat up for another hour talking over his famous bear hunt in Tennessee when he was President. He spent two weeks on the hunt without seeing a bear, until in desperation the hunters corrailed a tame bear and placed it where the President refused to shoot. He said he knew enough about
